

Yahong Li is an Associate Professor and the Director of LLM Program in Intellectual Property and Information Law at the Department of Law of the University of Hong Kong (HKU). She is also an Associate Director of HKU Technology Transfer Office, a Legal Project Lead of Hong Kong Creative Commons, a Founding Member and Honorary Advisor for Hong Kong Institute of Patent Attorneys. She received her undergraduate and graduate legal study in China, and then received her Master and Doctor in Science of Law (JSD) from Stanford Law School specializing in intellectual property law. She teaches Intellectual Property, Innovation and Development; Management and Commercialization of Intellectual Property; International and Comparative Intellectual Property. She is an author of many journal articles and two books on intellectual property law including Imitation to Innovation in China: the Role of Patents in Biotechnology and Pharmaceutical Industries (Edward Elgar, 2010) and International and Comparative Intellectual Property Law: Law, Policy and Practice (LexisNexis, 2005).