Digitisation in galleries, libraries, archives and museums has delivered created new knowledge and audiences. The creation of online experiences has provided an opportunity to explore complex technologies to deliver solutions that go beyond our physical resources.

This paper will cover digitisation in some Australian museums, the parliament and libraries including the Parliament of Australia, National Library of Australian, Australian National University and Australian War Memorial.

Technologies used in delivery, including XML, audience analysis and use of the digital collections to build new engagement with the community will be analysed.
